DEWEY'S HORSES MISS KIND MASTER

Sleek Bays Chafe in Stalls Listening Vainly for Familiar Voice.

Coachman Sadly Recalls Democratic Chats With Admiral on Daily Drives.

Standing quietly in a stable in the rear of a K street residence, their feet deep in clean, sweet smelling straw, are two horses. Every once in a while their heads turn toward a door of the stable, and then as the footsteps of some passerby are heard resume the steady munching of their

For more than a week the two bay horses have been standing thus, and for eight days they have been disappointed by hearing the footsteps pass on their way down the little al-ley in the rear of Admiral Dewey's street house. They can't understand it. For the long years that Frank and Bob have been owned by the famous old sea fighter, few days have gone by but what they were taken out of the stable, harnessed to a carriage, and driven out through Rock Creek Park or around the Speedway, while Admiral Dewey rode behind and conversed with the coachman.

Lust Drive Wednesday.

And Wednesday, a week ago, they were harnessed for the last time. Perhaps, they realized when the servants carefully helped Admiral Dewey to his seat for that last drive, that their master was becoming weaker. At any rate, they trotted slowly and evenly around the Speedway, and brought the carriage safely back after a short

And then the following day they were about to be harnessed by the coachman when the phone in the stable rang. A voice from the other end of the wire said that the admiral would not go out for the accustomed drive. He was weak and had just had a severe fainting spell. Since then the short exercising morning in the only thing that breaks the routine of their existence. Silently and hopefully they await the steps that will tell them the coachman is to harness them for the spin through the park. or better still, that the admiral hi is coming out to the stable to rub their soft muzzles and talk with them.

Horses Miss Master.

Frank is especially hopeful. The coachman said that the old admiral was very fond of the big bay horse, and in the long years that Frank carried him through the streets and out into the cool woods of Rock Creek Park he has grown to know and love his master. He seemed to take pride in the position as

But Frank will be disappointed, and o will Bob! Whether in the breaking up of the routine of a household follow ing the death of its head, the two old horses will be disposed of is not known. Stamp their feet and champ their bits as they wait for the morning drive to begin.

Admiral Dewey never became quite reconciled to automobiles, and he used to lavish his affections on the two animals who made him grow to love the fast trot through the woods of the parks in Washington or else around the river side speedway.

And while the horses stand waiting for the summons to the carriage, coachman curries them and rubs their sleek hair till they fairly shine. He is sad, and tells in a voice that trem bles a bit, how he used to drive his master every morning.

Chatted With Coachman.

"He would talk to me all the time we were out," he said. "When we vere driving around the speedway in the evening, he would show me the crows coming over from the Virginia side. 'See those crows?' he would say to me, 'Well, those crows will go up in the woods around Soldiers' Home to roost tonight, and tomorrow morning early, they'll fly back over to the Virginia side to feed.' And then when we were driving through Rock Creek Park and he would see the men cutting trees or something, he would point them out to me and tell

"And he loved these horses. He liked Frank more than Bob, but he loved tnem both." And in the meanwhile, the two bay horses, all prepared for the drive that will never come, stand in the stalls, ing what is keeping their master.
